

Employee Assistance Program

Does using the EAP cost anything?

All costs for services shall be the responsibility of the employee. Health insurance programs may cover a substantial portion of services such as hospitalization or outpatient treatment for alcohol or drug abuse, psychiatric services, or counseling. Health care limits how much they provide on such services, so you should realize the importance of your commitment to treatment at this point in time. Some of the most effective services, such as self-help groups, are free.

Employees may contact an EAP member at the DHH for assistance in clarifying any insurance coverage questions at (225) 922-2700.

Who can participate in the EAP?

The services of the EAP are available to employees and their immediate family members.

A family member may contact the coordinator for himself or the family on behalf of an employee.

To All Employees:

I take this opportunity to inform you of my commitment to the Employee Assistance Program in Youth Services.

On occasion, some of us may confront problems that we cannot solve by ourselves. These problems may be domestic or financial; these problems may involve alcohol or drug abuse. However, if such problems go unaddressed, they will interfere with job performance. Some of these problems may seriously affect physical and mental health and may threaten continued employment.

EAP offers a means by which those employees needing assistance can be referred to appropriate resources within our local communities.

Employee Assistance Program

What is the EAP

It is the Employee Assistance Program – a program to help you deal with personal problems that affect your job performance and well-being. EAP has one goal – to help you in a time of personal crisis or other trouble.

Why is there an EAP

To help you lead a fuller and more productive life. By doing this, everyone benefits – the employee and the employer.

EAP services are strictly confidential. No information about an employee's participation or problems will be divulged to any person or agency without written authorization signed by the employee. Furthermore, this information is not recorded in personnel files, nor does it serve as a negative factor in personnel decisions or yearly evaluations.

EAPs can help with:

Alcohol or Drug Abuse

Abuse of alcohol and other drugs wastes dollars as well as lives. Help is available for the employee and his family members who may have a substance abuse problem.

Marital Problems

Marital discord can cause reduced efficiency at work. Counseling is often effective in restoring communication between spouses and helping them explore alternative solutions.

Family Problems

The modern family may face a multitude of problems including emotional crisis, children using drugs or alcohol, and medical problems. The EAP can be the first step to finding help.

Family violence is private violence. It is a physical and/or emotional abuse of family members in the home. The EAP Coordinator can assist you in finding professional help if you are in this situation.

Financial Problems

Financial problems occasionally cause serious anxiety at home and at work. The EAP can refer you to a skilled counselor who can assist in resolving a financial crisis.

Workplace Violence

Violence by employees on other employees or youth is strictly prohibited. Employees who are stressed in other parts of their life should not bring that stress to work and express it through acts of violence towards others. The EAP can provide immediate referrals for employees who need a support system.

How to take advantage of EAP

If an employee feels that he has a problem which may be affecting his work or any other part of his life, he may request assistance from the Unit EAP Coordinator. The EAP Coordinator shall refer the employee to the appropriate helping agency.

If time off from work is required to participate in the EAP, the employee's supervisor, as well as the Unit Head shall be told only that the employee is participating in the program by the EAP Coordinator. No specific information shall be revealed.

A supervisor may refer an employee on the basis of job performance. The supervisor shall not try to diagnose the problem, but is in a position to recognize a sharp decline in work performance which may be an indication of an underlying problem.

All employees are offered the services of the EAP, but a person is not required to avail himself of this assistance if he does not wish to do so, unless referred by their supervisor.

The EAP, however, shall not shield an employee from consequences of any violation of the law or employee rules which he may commit.
